SEZ TH' PREZ

Hi all,

Winter is here, time to drag out the big jackets and woolly socks. A few good trips coming up for those that are game and will be well worth the effort. It would be good to see some new faces on trips, so check the calender and come along.

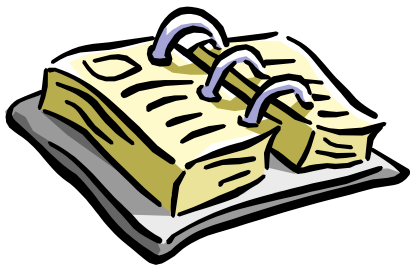

The website is up and running (<http://www.jeepclubofnsw.org.au>) so contact Mike (michael@michaelmcfadyenscuba.info) for access and send him any pics or stories you want added.

This Sunday (25th May) there is a 4wd club expo at Penrith's Museum of Fire, we will be having a small display and the opportunity to sell our club to others. It would be great to show that even though we may be a small club, we are active and enthusiastic 4wder's.

NB Don't forget the AGM is coming up soon, with a trip planned on the Sunday.

See ya

THE NEW ED'S EDITORIAL

Howdy all,

I have received some member profiles but there is still quite a few to come. It's only a fun thing, you don't have to be too serious, so send them in. Don't forget this also applies to partners as well.

If you spot something of interest send it into me and I will put it in the "FROM THE NEWS DESK" segment. It doesn't have to be related to 4WD's only, it can be anything that may interest other members or it may be just a good read.

Warren has got a wanted ad in the newsletter (see below). I've been told he is willing to pay top dollar.

See Ya,

Brettly.

Reccy to Mt Nangar and Canobolas SF/NP

With the planned trip postponed due to a lack of numbers, I changed my mind at the last minute and risked the wrath of the wife to accompany Ray on an investigation of an area not visited by the club before.

Ray and I headed off in his 80 early Friday morning and stopped a few times to grab supplies and maps along the way. We eventually ended up at Nangar and poked around an old farmhouse then went in search of possible campsites and climb the Mountain. We saw "Dripping Rock" but we were the only drips happening that day. The climb up was interesting, but nothing too hard and LR not needed.

The view from the lookout was quite good and we could see a fair way.

As the day was getting and we hadn't seen any inviting campsites yet we decided to keep looking. After a few detours and backtracking, we were just about to head out of the park when we tried one more track that had a nice flat grassy area and plenty of wood allaying around. It should be noted that 90% of the gates were open which was quite unusual for NP's, we also never saw another human being in that 24hrs, so not a particular busy park. There were no flowing streams either. A few roos and wallabies but not much else.

On the Saturday, we headed out towards Mt Canobolas, it was a good drive sticking to the dirt roads between farms as we headed east. Most of the dams were near empty, a bit of a change from Dungog 3 weeks ago, with creeks flooded, etc.

We hit the state forest about morning tea and found a couple of fun hill climbs, very similar to Sunny Corner with pine forest and soil type (shaly stuff). That's when we heard the forecast of "snow showers in the high country" hmmm that's we're headed!

We did a bit more exploring and tried to find a fire tower, but it's either burnt down or overgrown.

We headed out of the SF and into the NP, we came across this gnarly little track that looked promising for a decent campsite, but in the end petered out to nothing after about 30-40 mins and a tree removal. Very disappointing.

Next stop was the Designated NP campsite, but upon arrival the gate was shut. No reason or sign why, just locked! It had only started raining that day so it seemed unlikely it was the weather. Anyway, we had a quick tour round the top, couldn't see anything as too much cloud, but there were several other vehicles enjoying the briskness.

We stopped for lunch at a picnic area a bit further down and had a good view over Orange and the clouds above us. That's when it started to sleet and we made the decision o head back towards Bathurst and checkout a place called Macquarie Woods run by SF.

On the way we found out that the SF maps are lacking in some details and roads that showed as meeting with others, did not. This was very frustrating. We eventually got there and found it a tad crowded with camper trailers and caravans. There was also no wood available and the fire pits looked decidedly small, as the temperature moved into low single figures.

There are several forest drives and worth a detour for lunch if you are on your way out west.

There are few spots on these drives to camp, if you ignore the "service track keep out" signs.

We found a picnic area that was empty and quick collected a store of wood for the night, (I even had some left over). The temp got down to about 1.5, but it was the wind that made it really cool and difficult to keep warm. Although, chilli stir-fry and several Cougars helped take the mind off things.

Sunday morning we woke to clear skies and a biting wind. A quick breakfast and tour of the other half of the park, uncovered a few more campsites and a mob of about 50+ roos.

Not much else to see there, so we headed back to Sydney.

A long way to go, with not a great deal of park to access, means it would suit more of a stop along the way to somewhere else type trip, rather than a destination trip, if you know what I mean. But that's just my opinion.

TRIP REPORT

DUNGOG APRIL 25 TO 27

Despite the chance of the roads to Dungog being flooded everyone (5 Fourbys) turned up outside the pub at about 10am where I was waiting, lucky it wasn't open it would've been a good alternative considering the weather. Priority number one was to find a campsite that wasn't 6 inches deep in mud. After looking at a couple we decided on one and set up. After sitting out some lengthy heavy showers, fire wood was next priority and that just about had the day beat.

The next morning was perfect weather so we headed off to look at Jerusalem Creek Falls. They were working well after all the rain. As we were leaving the falls Ray heard something come over the cb, it was Gary and Rod from the Cherokee Club, they joined us for the day but that was cut short when a very loose front pinion bearing was noticed while we were having lunch at Berrico trig.

Directions were given and they headed off back to Booral where they were camped for the weekend. The rest of us headed off down a track that kept us entertained for a while a good one to go up another time in the dry. Since we were a reasonable distance from camp it was time to head back, easier said than done. After I had a bit of a moment [a bit of a moment? ED] crossing the Karuah and wasn't game to go back across that left us separated, after discussing the next plan of attack over the cb saw the club back track about 45min of driving to the next crossing. Which was fine after cutting some more fire wood we didn't get to camp till dark.

Brettly departed after we broke camp Sunday morning due to a disconnected sway bar, then we drove some easy tracks since there was not much choice due to wet slippery conditions. After some sightseeing and lunch I had one more little loop in mind, we should've just went home. The track seemed to have been spiked, three of us got punctures all in the same position on the tyre, a bit sus. It's a shame the reckies Ken and I did couldn't be used we will have come back in the dry.

Matt.
